DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

The factual inquiries set forth in Graham v. John Deere Co., 383 U.S. 1, 148 USPQ 459 (1966), that are applied for establishing a background for determining obviousness under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) are summarized as follows:

1. Determining the scope and contents of the prior art.
2. Ascertaining the differences between the prior art and the claims at issue.
3. Resolving the level of ordinary skill in the pertinent art.
4. Considering objective evidence present in the application indicating obviousness or nonobviousness.

Claims 1-13 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Bastek (5551812) in view of Feenstra (3575247).

Bastek (5551812) discloses a reamer comprising a base body with a cutting element (17) and at least one guiding strip (16) aligned essentially axially with an abutment surface and a guiding surface, whereby the guiding surface is connected to the base body in the area of the abutment surface; characterized in that the guiding strip run essentially parallel to the rotational axis of the base body.

Bastek lacks the disclosure of the guiding strip being formed of layered bodies of different materials running from the guiding surface to the abutment surface.

Art Unit: 3724

Feenstra (3575247) discloses such an arrangement with a guiding strip (12) formed of layered bodies. Feenstra discloses at column 6, lines 38-50:

The shape of the side extension 13 as shown in FIG. 4 is mostly but not necessarily adapted to the shape of the stabilizing member 12. The most convenient manner of mounting the stabilizing members on the drill collar is by soldering these members in grooves cut in the side extensions. The members may be manufactured of tungsten carbide powder or grains. The diamonds are placed in the required positions at the required locations in graphite moulds of the elements, whereafter the remainder of the space within the mould is filled with the tungsten carbide grains. A desired amount of binder material is then placed on the grains to be sintered and the whole is subjected to a required sintering temperature.

With respect to claims 6-10 and 12, it would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to use the claimed materials, since it has been held to be within the general skill of a worker in the art to select a known material on the basis of its suitability for the intended use as a matter of obvious design choice. In re Leshin, 125 USPQ 416.

With respect to claims 5,6 and 11, it would have been an obvious matter of design choice to use the claimed dimensions since such a modification would have involved a mere change in the size of a component. A change in size is generally recognized as being within the level of ordinary skill in the art. In re Rose, 105 USPQ 237 (CCPA 1955). It appears that there would be no new or unexpected result from such a modification.

Conclusion

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.
